

Public Interest Disclosures

The Public Interest Disclosure Act 2003 (PID Act) allows any person to make a disclosure if they believe something is wrong with the way that a public authority, public officer or public sector contractor is acting, without fear of reprisal.

As a State Government statutory authority, the Wheatbelt Development Commission and its staff and contractors are subject to the PID Act.

The Commission supports its employees to uphold high standards of professional and ethical conduct. We strongly encourage employees and community to disclose any unethical behaviour.

Making a public interest disclosure

The PID Act deals with disclosures in the public interest made by any person, not just disclosures made by government employees. Disclosures can be anonymous.

A disclosure is more than a general complaint about dissatisfaction with a product or service or a decision by government. It is also more than a personal grievance that can be resolved by agreement between parties.

The information disclosed must:

- Relate to a matter of public interest; and
- Show or tend to show wrongdoing by a:
 - Public authority,
 - Public officer, or
 - Public sector contractor performing a public function

If the information is not covered by the PID Act, you can still lodge your complaint through the Wheatbelt Development Commission's complaints management procedure.
